INTRODUCTION

Taxonomy

Standing up to 2 meters tall the Sarus Crane Grus antigone is the world's tallest flying bird. Found in the Order Gruiformes, Family Gruidae it is one of 15 species of cranes. The Australian Brolga G. rubicunda, and White-naped Crane G. vipio, are its closest relatives. Sarus Cranes Grus antigone, currently have three recognized subspecies, the Indian G. a. antigone, Eastern G. a. sharpii, and the Australian G. a. gilli. At one time a fourth subspecies G. a. luzanica existed in the Philippines, but has not been seen since the early 1970s and is now presumed to be extinct.

Recent studies using DNA now show evidence that there are no genetically distinct subspecies of Sarus Cranes, but are only separate populations of the same species. In an upcoming IUCN Action Plan it will be recommended to drop the subspecies names and all Sarus Cranes to be classified to the nominate Grus antigone.

Identification of the Three Subspecies of Sarus Cranes

There are several morphological differences between subspecies, although there is a great deal of variation within each population. Plumage of all three is uniformly gray, but the Indian Sarus has a white collar that can vary in size between individuals, and white inner tertiary feathers. The Eastern Sarus is slightly shorter with lighter gray coloring where the red skin of the upper neck meets the feathers. Shorter still, darker grey, and with the red coloring on the neck not extending as far down as the other subspecies is the Australian Sarus.

Status of the Wild Populations

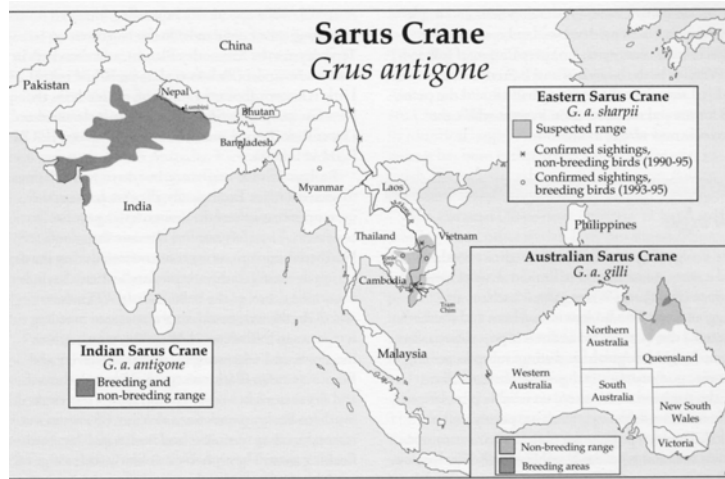

Sarus Cranes are currently listed as VULNERABLE A2cde + 3cde+ 4cde on the IUCN red list. The population of Indian Sarus Cranes resides in northern India and Nepal, and is estimated to be between 8000- 10,000 birds.

The Eastern Sarus has two separate populations. One population exists in Cambodia, Southern Laos, and winters in Vietnam with the other occupying parts of China and Myanmar. In recent decades the total population for the Eastern Sarus has been reduced to 500- 1500 birds.

In Australia, the population is estimated at 5000 birds and it is thought to be increasing due to changes in agricultural practices.

In recent years populations of the Indian and especially the Eastern populations have been reduced dramatically. Agricultural expansion, loss and degradation of wetlands, industrial development, river basin development, pollution, heavy use of pesticides, war, illegal poaching, and human population growth have all contributed to the decline of Sarus Cranes.

Data Field Description

Whenever possible, individual birds were identified to the subspecies level. The data set includes subspecies identification for all individuals, but due to the size of the historical report it has been omitted from this studbook. The report for the living population contains subspecies designations for the purposes of population management. The designations are as follows:

I= Indian Sarus, Grus antigone antigone

A= Australian Sarus, Grus antigone gilli

V= Asian Sarus, Grus antigone sharpi

H= Hybrid

U= Unknown

Conventions

If an individual specimen is listed to the subspecies level, then it will be assumed that the reporting institution is knowledgeable enough to make that distinction and the information can be trusted. Also, subspecies were determined from place of origin. For example all birds imported from India are assumed to be the Indian subspecies.

If an individual not listed to the subspecies level is visually identified to the subspecies level, than it can be assumed that all direct relatives are also of that subspecies.

If an individual is brought into the U.S.A. and not specified CAPTIVE HATCH/ WILD CAUGHT than it is assumed to be WILD CAUGHT.

When estimating hatch dates to the year, July 1 was used because it is the middle of the breeding season.
